Tropical Weather Awareness

Interests in and along the northwestern Gulf of Mexico should monitor the progress of this system. Regardless of tropical cyclone formation, tropical storm conditions are possible along portions of the middle and upper Texas coast and the western Louisiana coast Monday night and Tuesday. The system is also likely to bring heavy rainfall with possible flooding across portions of eastern Texas and western Louisiana. For additional information, please see High Seas Forecasts and products issued by your local National Weather Service forecast office.

Hazardous Weather

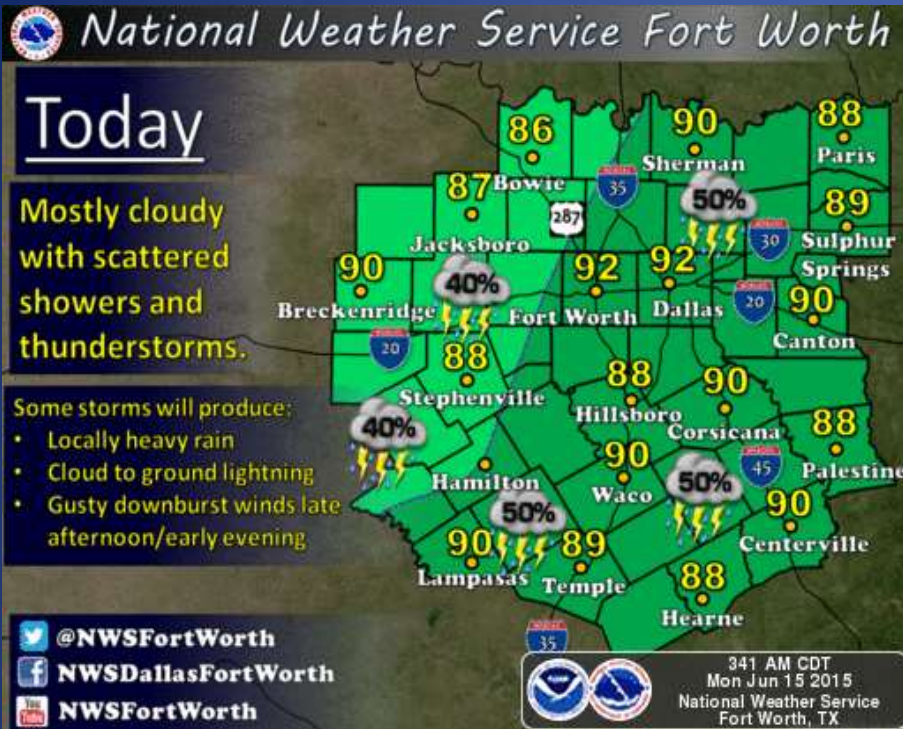

Drier air aloft will work into the northwest South Plains today serving to keep thunderstorm chances there low compared to better chances farther southeast. Severe storms are unlikely as wind shear and instability will be weak, however some spotty heavy rainfall is possible. Highs will top out around 80 degrees.

More thunderstorms are expected today with below normal temperatures. The strongest storms will be capable of producing brief gusty winds, small hail and frequent lightning. Locally heavy rainfall will be the greater concern however.

Hazardous Weather

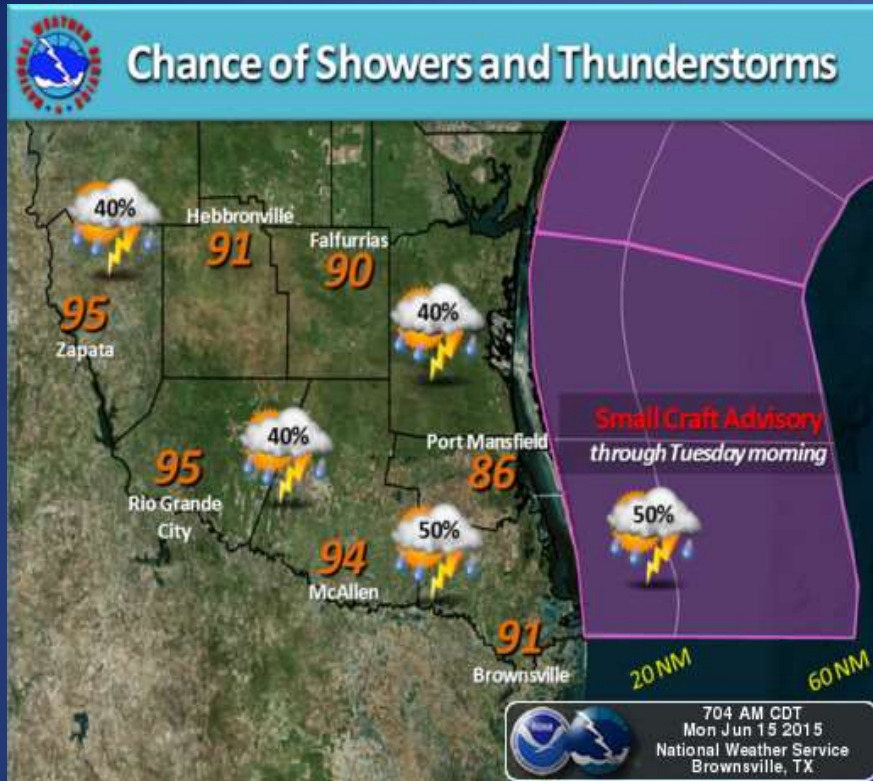

With an upper level trough to our west and rich low level moisture in place, today's forecast will be similar to yesterdays. We will have mostly cloudy skies today with scattered mainly late morning through early evening showers and thunderstorms. Highs will be in the mid 80s to lower 90s.

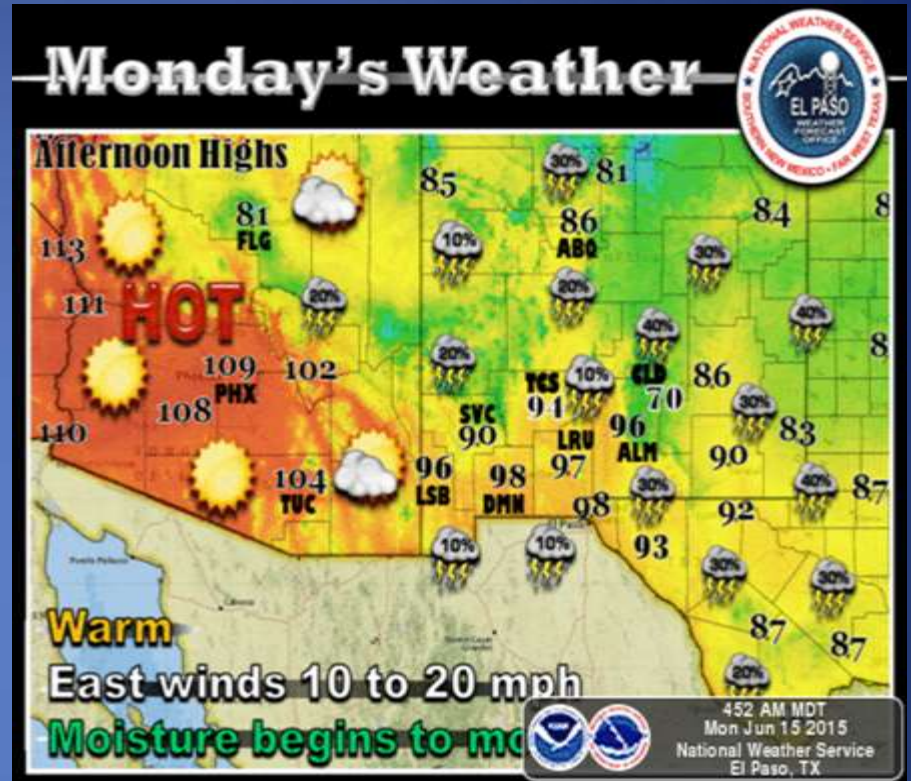

Yet more rain is expected today and tonight across much of Oklahoma and north Texas. A few strong to severe storms will also be possible, capable of damaging wind gusts and marginally severe hail. Localized flooding will also remain a concern.

Hazardous Weather

Showers and thunderstorms will continue this morning and afternoon ahead of a developing tropical disturbance over the Gulf of Mexico. Conditions over the marine waters will be hazardous all day today with Small Craft Advisories in effect for most of the Texas coastlines. Winds will turn out of the northeast at 10-15 mph.

With an upper level trough to our west and rich low level moisture in place, today's forecast will be similar to yesterdays. We will have mostly cloudy skies today with scattered mainly late morning through early evening showers and thunderstorms. Highs will be in the mid 80s to lower 90s.
